

Sensory Profile Education for Staff

Sensory assessments help identify the cause of some unusual behaviours triggered by sensitivities to sight, hearing, taste, touch, smell and movement.

For people with Autism it can help identify:

- effects of sensory experiences on eg behaviour, learning, relationships and independence
- living, learning and working environments that will be best support the individual
- meaningful and pleasurable activities for the individual
- triggers for unusual behaviours so they can be avoided

Sensory Profile Assessments are useful for people of all ages. Our response to information from our senses changes as we grow, develop and age. There are different assessments for each stage of life.

This two hour session is an interactive hands on session to help the participants understand their own sensory preferences so they can better support themselves, their team and their clients.
